The Postal Museum brings five centuries of communications history to life

The Postal Museum tells the story of 500 years of British heritage, of pioneering design and innovation, and of everyday interactions that enrich us all. We tell this story and provoke questions about communication today.

In 2017, we opened The Postal Museum, a new home for our incredible collections and a new chapter in our long history. Since then, we've been nominated for numerous awards and attracted a much more diverse group of visitors than many other museums.

We are now using our history of heritage, innovation and social impact to shape our future. As a new museum, we have tremendous potential to grow, using the stories in our collection to put communication and connection at the heart of our activity.

Support from Patrons enables us to present outstanding exhibitions, conserve and digitise our valuable Postal Museum Archive and deliver our extensive learning and community programmes.
